Mobilevideo for Windows Phone 8 allows you to record live videos in HD and at up to 60 frames per second (fps). The app can perform tasks only on Windows RT devices (with x86 processors and 32 GB of storage); this means that using it on Windows 8 will be more complicated. As you could have guessed, the app also supports encoding up to 1080p and 3 Mbps. The latest version introduced time-stretching modes and the ability to run the app in the background during a call. The interface is minimalist, but allows you to edit some of the video options, including audio volume. When editing the video settings, we came across a couple of problems: the video player and the video producer cannot be located simultaneously, and the number of frames per second is limited to 25 by default. You can create and store multiple output profiles, and select a suitable format for sending the video. Your recordings can be sent to any mobile device, including the iPhone and the iPad. The program's video quality was decent, but the sound was not so clear. A slight lag occurred when recording videos in 3G mode. As for stability, Mobilevideo for Windows Phone 8 performed quite well during our tests - most of the time it stayed idle, and a quick search yielded no popup messages. Mobilevideo for iPhone is a simple tool for creating videos compatible with iPhone devices (iPhone, iPod Touch, iPhone 3G, iPhone 3GS). The app does not require a computer; you can record videos directly on your iPhone. The interface is very simple, and is divided into two sections: the first one shows the current recording session, while the second one allows you to add new content, edit the source path and choose the output file format. The processing speed is satisfactory and you can even apply sophisticated audio effects. The only drawback is that the program allows you to edit videos only while they are being recorded. We did not see any major problems with the app's stability and we had no trouble with the stability of our test units - only once in a while the app froze for a second or two. At the time of writing, Mobilevideo for iPhone comes with two profiles: one is compatible with iPhone, iPod and iPod Touch devices, while the other one supports the iPhone 3G. After your video is complete, you can transfer it to your PC or send it to your favorite mobile device via email. You can create and edit multiple output profiles, send a video as an attachment or send it
